Comment
Of The Day

The Lady's not for burning

"LADY Chatterley's Lover" is in the clear. A British jury has said so. And against the verdict of these nine men and three women, good and true, there is no appeal. Their verdict is a breath of Spring air blowing through the land.

Never again, we hope, will England be the laughing stock of the world as when her writers and artists had to troop into court one by one, and assure Justice, wigged and gowned, that there was not an indecent idea in such a maidenly and modest book as Lady Chatterley's "The Well of Loneliness."

A LL honour then to Penguin Books who deliberately courted prosecution by submitting an unexpurgated version of Lawrence's book. They have rendered a service to art which can never be repaid, and at the same time lifted the stigma of smug hypocrisy under which English artists have laboured. And what is more, they have vindicated the reputation of Lawrence, one of the greatest novelists of this century.

But what a lot of silly nonsense the whole affair has been. If only someone with a halfpennyworth of common sense had taken the trouble to read Lawrence's preface to the banned edition they would have seen what he was about. If he is attacking anyone, it is the romantic idealists who placed woman on a pedestal she is unwilling and unable to accept. But the guardians of the public morals would have none of it, and we had one of those periodical outbursts which makes England appear so foolish to people with a real appreciation of the arts.

WE may be sure that we have not heard the last of it. Prudery exists not only in high places but in the humblest parochial committees—indeed it was just such a group of tea and toast eaters in Australia who secured a ban on Lawson Glassop's "We were the Rats."

His only sin was that he made his soldiers in beleaguered Tobruk speak in ordinary soldiers' language, and refused the fatuously innocuous and totally false substitutes that his "heavenly" critics demanded. So we may be sure that acting in the name of decency, people will rake up new horrors which shock their fragile, sheltered minds.

BUT let us hope that Penguin's Chairman, Sir Allen Fox, publisher of the book, is right when he said after the verdict that it is extremely doubtful whether there could ever be another similar prosecution. Lady Chatterley was a test case, but its success may have been partly due to the fact that the Crown called no witnesses to support its charge.

What the authorities must understand is that the business of banning, of placing under the counter, of searching down the illicit ways of Charing Cross Road is the dirty business. Intelligent people should be above the mentality of the Port Said gutter snipe who peddle his filthy postcards with evil leers and sly winks. Make no mistake: this is one ruling which British people can be proud of.

United States scientist makes dramatic announcement FANTASTIC NUCLEAR WEAPON

Poisoned by the
'Red Hand'?

REBEL LEADER

DIES

Geneva, Nov. 3.
Felix Moumie, 34-year-old French Cameroons former rebel leader, who was reported to have been poisoned by the "Red Hand" secret organisation, died in hospital here tonight.

The "Red Hand" is a clandestine organisation active in counter-terrorist activities against the Algerian insurgents. Moumie, who was admitted to hospital here on October 16 with suspected poisoning, was said to have told a Swiss newspaper the "Red Hand"—a French counter-terrorist organisation—had poisoned him.

NO DETAILS
A hospital official declined to give any further details. "I have instructions to say no more than that Mr Moumie died at a quarter past seven this evening," the official said. Mr Moumie was admitted to the hospital suffering from suspected poisoning by thallium, a substance used in rat poison. Mr Moumie had been in a coma for several days—recently he was placed in an iron lung—and police were unable to question him.

Police today interrogated Miss Liliane Friot, a mysterious girl (friend of Moumie) who is in a clinic at nearby Salgny, suffering from an overdose of sleeping pills.—Reuter and UPI.

Polaris missiles

Charleston, S.C., Nov. 3.
The submarine George Washington was today being loaded with her first nuclear warhead Polaris missiles. Sixteen missiles in all will be put aboard the atomic-powered vessel in the next nine days.—Reuter.

New invention radically different

New York, Nov. 3.

The United States has perfected a "fantastic" new nuclear weapon, as radically different from the H-bomb as the hydrogen weapons is from the first atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima, an atomic scientist said today.

Thomas Murray, member of the American Atomic Energy Commission from 1950 to 1957, reported the perfecting of the "third generation" nuclear arm in an open letter addressed to both the Democratic and Republican candidates for the American presidency, Senator John Kennedy and Vice-President Richard Nixon.

"The new weapon will not be a bigger or more effective H-bomb, nor a smaller and more effective A-bomb," but a weapon of an entirely different category, Mr Murray said. "All that could now be said of the new weapon was that it was intended for anti-personnel purposes, and was therefore 'apt for normal military uses' he added.

Information

The new weapon "lends itself to a new type of nuclear strategy that would be more narrowly military in character," stated Mr Murray, adding that "it need not create suicidal hazards for the country that employs it." "Therefore," he continued, "a moral argument for the use of the new weapon is possible, as is generally not possible in the case of the immense weapons of sheer mass-destruction." "Further information of a classified kind is available to you from appropriate governmental agencies," he told Mr Kennedy and Mr Nixon. "The letter stated that 'conceptual designs for this new type of weapon have existed in American laboratories, they would have already been tested, had it not been for our testing moratorium.'"

The nuclear testing moratorium "has effectively blocked American advance to a position of military and political strength," Mr Murray said.

Tests

"I take it for granted," said Mr Murray, "that the Soviet Union is actively developing nuclear technology along this revolutionary line." "I must assume that they have done some preliminary tests of the new fantastic weapon. Such tests could easily have been carried on without detection," he continued.

Mr Murray concluded by demanding that the two Presidential candidates pledge to resume nuclear testing and bring the moratorium on underground nuclear tests to an end. "US nuclear physicists speculated tonight that the 'radically new type' of nuclear weapon might be a non-explosive 'neutron bomb' capable of shooting out lethal or otherwise-damaging nuclear rays. Such a 'bomb,' as the physicists see it, would actually be a small, mobile nuclear reactor—a junior-sized version of reactors already used to generate submarines and to produce electricity. TIMOSHENKO IS REPLACED

Famous Russian soldier may be retiring

Moscow, Nov. 3.

Marshal Semen Timoshenko, the Ukrainian peasant's son who became Red Army Chief during World War Two, has been replaced as commander of the Byelorussian military district, it was revealed here today.

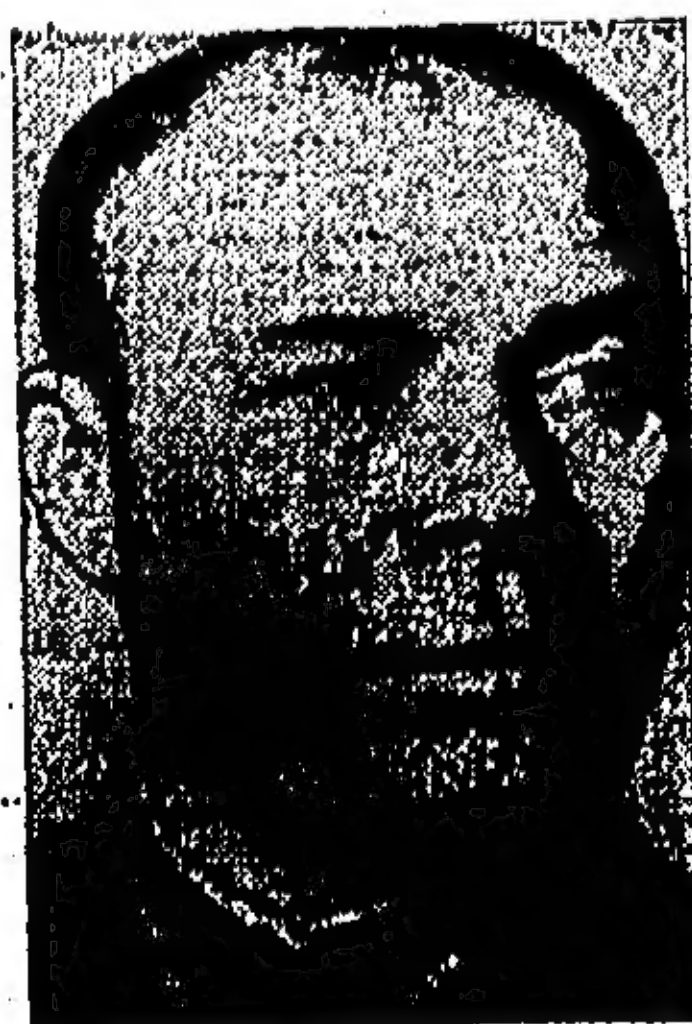

No official announcement has been made of his replacement, which was disclosed when the Army newspaper, Red Star, published an article by Colonel-General Vladimir Komarov, described as holding the Byelorussian command.

Marshal Timoshenko, who was awarded the Order of Lenin in 1955, is 65—retiring age in the Soviet Army.

His appointment as commander of the Byelorussian military district was first mentioned by Red Star in 1956, when he spoke at a Communist Party military conference there.

PEASANT

Born of a peasant family, the giant Ukrainian worked first as a farm-hand, served as a private and NCO in World War One, then volunteered for the Red Army. In May 1940 he was appointed People's Commissar of Defence replacing Marshal Kliment Voroshilov, and was promoted Marshal. He was subsequently Commander-in-Chief of the western and northwestern lines in the war against Germany. Marshal Timoshenko had a colourful civil war career, serving at one time as a brigadier.

Semen Timoshenko

commander in the famed Cavalry Corps led by Marshal Semen Budyonny. He became a division commander and played an important role in the 1919 revolt against Denikin's White Army. Although wounded five times in the civil war, he remained an active soldier. During the 1930's he commanded different military districts, including at one time Byelorussia, and earned a reputation for being a tough disciplinarian. In December 1939 he took charge of the Soviet northwestern front in the war against Finland. As master tactician in the war against Nazi Germany, he was switched around the Soviet fronts, finally leading Russian troops into Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Yugoslavia and Austria.

NATURAL

He was believed to have helped Marshal Georgy Zhukov to promotion, but when the latter fell from grace in 1957, Marshal Timoshenko joined in criticisms at party meetings. His replacement would appear to be the natural result of his teaching US—retirement age in the Red Army. Little is known here of his successor, Col-General Vladimir Komarov, except that he led a Soviet military delegation to Yugoslavia four years ago. In the Red Star article he discussed the decisive role of the Communist Party in Soviet Army life.—Reuter.

Sensational start to 'Algiers Plot' trial

Challenge to a duel with paratroop daggers

Paris, Nov. 3.

The "Algiers Plot" trial got off to a sensational start here today when one of the accused announced his intention of challenging the Government Delegate-General, Mr Paul Delouvrier, to a duel "As soon as I am a free citizen again."

Rightwing former deputy Jean-Marie Demarquet, 37, told an astonished military court: "My honour is at stake. As I have been insulted and have the choice of weapons, I will choose a fight stripped to the waist and with paratroop daggers."

Duelling is forbidden in France. Demarquet, former paratroop lieutenant, had already delayed the start of the trial in a strong-guarded courtroom for 90 minutes by refusing to appear except in paratroop camouflage uniform.

The rest of the 20 accused—except for four being tried in their absence and one who is ill in Algiers—had filed into the dock without Demarquet. Later he was allowed to appear in uniform to back his demand to wear the uniform during the trial and to make his duel challenge.

But the court rejected his uniform demand. In Algiers, where security precautions were stiffened, European students staged a strike in sympathy with their former leaders.

Twelve Europeans were expelled from Algeria today, it was officially announced. In Paris hundreds of police and plainclothes men guarded the huge grey stone Court of Justice on the Ile de la Cite in the heart of Paris as the most dramatic trial in recent French political history began. The court adjourned till tomorrow after hearing part of the 140-page indictment. The opening session had lasted three and three-quarter hours. The civilian President of the Court, Judge Andre Thiriet, ruled that those released on provision liberty pending trial could remain free, provided they stayed in the Paris area.—Reuter.

GAITSKELL RE-ELECTED LABOUR LEADER

London, Nov. 3.

Mr Hugh Gaitskell was re-elected leader of the Labour Party tonight, retaining the post he has held since 1955. The vote in the Parliamentary Labour Party was 169 votes for Mr Gaitskell to 81 for Mr Harold Wilson, veteran "third man" of the Party who challenged Mr Gaitskell on the issue of Party unity.

PRESSURE

Mr Gaitskell's victory climaxed a year-long campaign waged against him by Mr Wilson and others who claimed that he was unable to hold the Party together and was leading it on the road to ruin. Mr Gaitskell also has stood against strong leftwing Party pressure for a policy of neutrality in the cold war, championed by unilateral British rejection of the nuclear deterrent. His new term is for the 1960-61 session of Parliament. Mr George Brown, who was supported by Mr Gaitskell, failed to win an absolute majority in the election for Deputy Leader. He won 118 votes against 73 for challenger Mr Fred Lee and 55 for Mr James Callaghan. The issue will be decided in an election between Mr Brown and Mr Callaghan in the coming week.—UPI.

More terrorism in the Congo: 22 die, 20 hurt

Leopoldville, Nov. 3.

At least 22 people have been killed and over 20 injured, including some women, in riots in the mining town of Kolwezi, northwest of Elisabethville, the UN press spokesman announced here today.

The dead, all Baluba tribesmen, were shot by police who opened fire after the Balubas had looted and burned shops yesterday in the African quarter, the spokesman added.

Some wounded women have taken refuge with the UN in Kolwezi and a medical team is being flown in.

The riots are believed to have been caused by a false radio report that Mr Jason Sendwe, Baluba opposition leader to President Tshombe of Katanga, had been arrested. Mr Sendwe is at present on a pacification tour of the troubled arcus of north Katanga under UN auspices. He is believed to have cancelled a proposed visit to Kolwezi. Other reports of trouble in Katanga came from Kabongo, where seven Balubas were killed and one wounded by police recently.

POLICE

A band of 150 Tshombe police is reported on its way to the town. UN troops have been put on an extra alert, the spokesman said. In Leopoldville, the Congolese authorities announced strict measures to combat acts of terrorism which have plagued the town recently.

A statement over the radio said civilians must hand in all arms within a week and anyone guilty of acts of violence or terrorism would be executed in public.

In South Kasai, Captain John Roberts, the British leader of a group of pro-Kalonji tribesmen, is still being held by the UN in Lubumbashi and investigations are continuing, the spokesman told a press conference. He said the UN was making every effort to persuade the Balubas to give up their arms and return to their villages.—Reuter.

Former U.S. envoy in Saigon ALLEGED BID TO DEFRAUD BANK OF US$20 MILLION

New York, Nov. 3.

A former US diplomat was held today on charges of taking part in an international scheme to defraud the Bank of America International of $20 million.

The FBI said it arrested Dinty Warmington Whiting, US Vice Consul in Saigon, Indo-China, in 1951-52, in connection with the bank scheme which was uncovered on September 16.

Whiting, a former lawyer from Miami, Florida, has lived in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, since 1959, the FBI said. Whiting was accused of being a principal conspirator with Walter J. Sarnitz of New York and James Riley Crowe, of Rosenberg, Texas, in the plot to get money from the Bank of America International and the Banco do Brasil in Rio, the FBI said.

Crowe and Sarnitz, alleged masterminds of the scheme, were arrested last month with Victor Mari and Lawrence J. Khiz, both of New York.

Whiting was charged with the illegal use of interstate communications in a scheme to defraud and faces five years in jail and a $1,000 fine if convicted.—UPI.

The Outlaw Ship that paved the way for Mr. K

The great battleship lay at anchor in the bay. Her paintwork glistened in the sun.

Her crew, in their smart, white summer uniforms, went quietly about their routine tasks.

She could have been a British battleship awaiting an admiral's inspection in the Mediterranean.

EXCEPT FOR THE FACT that her captain was dead—murdered by his mutinous crew: THAT the ship was in the hands of a committee of mutineers.

AND THAT she no longer flew the flag of her own proud Navy, but a flag which proclaimed revolt against the authority of the State.

Conflicts

The ship was the Potemkin, greatest battleship in the Black Sea Squadron of the Imperial Russian Navy. The time: June 1905.

The mutiny in the Potemkin was an event of immense international significance. And of far-reaching human conflicts. It began, without premeditation, over some meat the crew did not like. Within minutes it flared into armed insurrection. And when the ship arrived in port—a port already torn with strikes and riots—agitation ashore believed their moment had come to sweep the whole country into revolution.

NEVER has a single ship played such an historic role. NEVER have cunning agitators exploited grievances, with such world-shaking impact. NEVER has a fleet been faced with such a cruel choice of loyalties: to fire on their comrades or become mutineers.

The seven-day rule of an outlaw battleship is without parallel in naval history. It was an event that compelled both admiration and horror: an event that changed the course of Russian history. Without it there might never have been a Khrushchev wielding the power that he does today.

Now the Potemkin affair has been reconstructed in detail by one of Britain's leading authorities on naval history: RICHARD HOUGH.

His book, The Potemkin Mutiny, is to be re-issued in the CHINA MAIL. The first long instalment appears.

Suez debt paid in full

Washington, Nov. 3.

Britain has made the final repayment of a $200 million cash loan negotiated from the International Monetary Fund after the 1956 Suez crisis. The final payment of $92,170,750 was made on October 27, the Fund said. This settles the full financial score of the crisis caused by the Anglo-French intervention.—Reuter.

Call for conciliation of all warring factions DAG DENOUNCES MOBUTU

Report to UN General Assembly

United Nations, Nov. 3.
The Secretary-General Mr Dag Hammarskjöld today laid before the UN General Assembly a report denouncing the army-backed Congo regime of Col. Joseph Mobutu and calling for a government of conciliation in which all warring factions would take part.

The long-awaited report was from his special representative, Indian diplomat Mr Rajeshwar Dayal, who blamed a new influx of Belgian nationals for part of the difficulty in the troubled African country.

MAO FOR MOSCOW?

MAO TSE-TUNG

Moscow, Nov. 3.
Mao Tse-tung, First Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party, may come to Moscow to attend anniversary celebrations of the Russian Revolution on November 7, according to rumours today.

It had been reported earlier that a conference of top leaders of world Communism, to discuss ideological differences between the Soviet and Chinese Communist parties, would probably be held at the time of the celebrations.—AP.

Mr Dayal made it plain that he believed the Mobutu coup had gravely complicated the situation. He said it had stifled all normal political activity and had actually become the principal funder of lawlessness.

Mr Dayal spoke of the office of Chief of State, held by Joseph Kasavubu, as one of the two Congo institutions whose foundations still stand. The other was the now inactive Parliament which was dissolved by Mobutu.

Once security is established, he said, these two institutions might serve as a medium for bringing political stability.

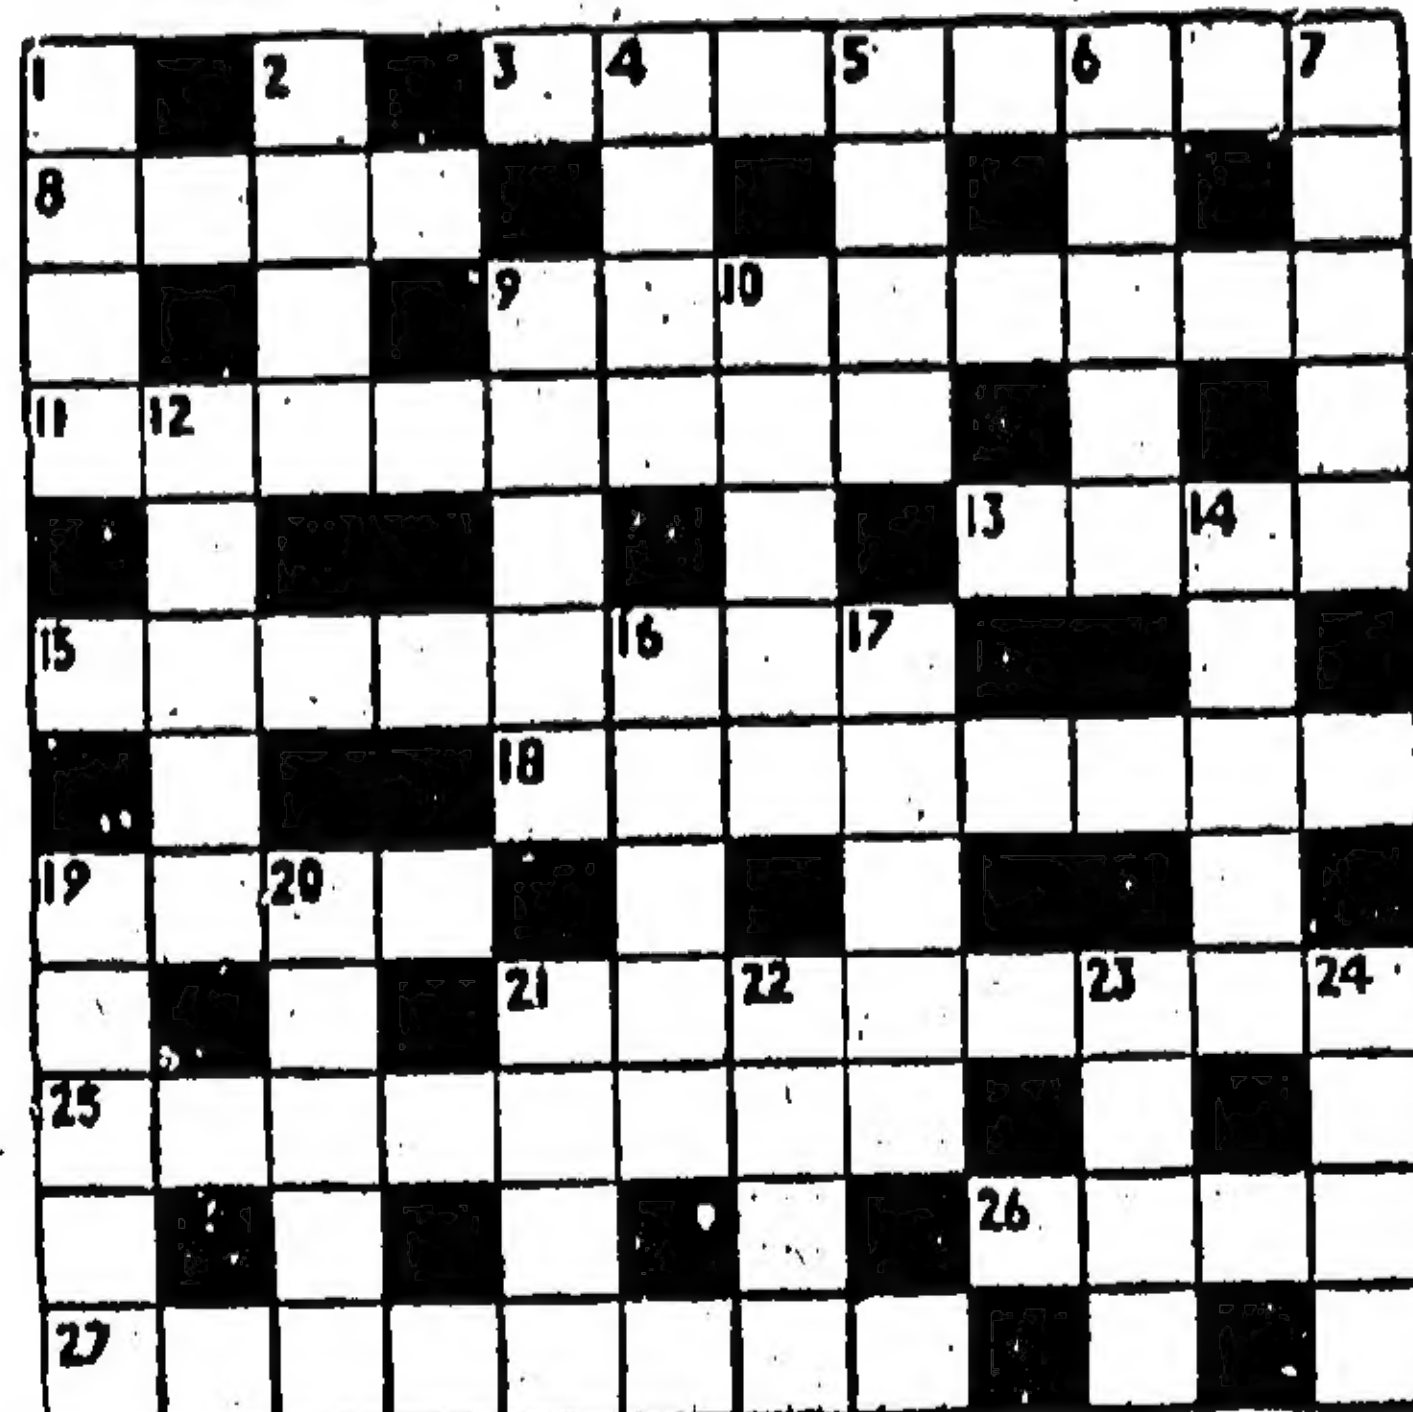

Submitted

The Dayal report was submitted to the Assembly together with an exchange of correspondence between Mr Hammarskjöld and the Belgian Government and with Moïse Tshombe, prime minister of Katanga Province. The main report, however, was Mr Dayal's own account.

The UN Command, he said, was maintaining contact with both Kasavubu and Mobutu. He mentioned departed Premier Patrice Lumumba only in a factual review of the Congo events.

He reported that large numbers of Belgians were returning to their former colony, which attained independence last July, and were exerting strong influence on the administration backed by Mobutu.—AP.

Controversial bill may be amended

Salisbury, Nov. 3.
The Southern Rhodesia government is considering amending the controversial Law and Order (Maintenance) Bill following various representations against it, it was announced here today.

A debate on the bill which gives the government greater control over disorderly acts and provides severe penalties for them, was postponed in the Southern Rhodesia Parliament today.

NO WITHDRAWAL

The Minister of Justice, Mr Reginald Knight, said the government was considering amending the bill in the light of various representations, but he added there was no intention of withdrawing the bill. "It is our purpose to achieve the objects of the bill," he said.

The Federal Chief Justice Sir Robert Tredgold, resigned on Tuesday in protest against the bill. He said it "outrages almost every basic human right and is an unwarranted invasion by the executive of the sphere of the courts."—Reuter.

FARMER FINDS WRECKAGE OF LONG-LOST PLANE

Lyon, Nov. 4.
A farmer cutting wood in an isolated part of forest near Monsele-en-Beaujolais discovered the wreckage of a private plane which disappeared on a flight four years ago.

The farmer first noticed a fragment of the plane's wing which still rested in the branches of a tree. Scattered about the ground was the wreckage of a four-place single-engine monoplane.

Authorities identified the pilot, whose skeleton was found still strapped in the compartment, as William Robert Brail, a Canadian living at the time of the crash in England.

His log showed that he left London on Oct. 2, 1956, on a cross-channel flight to Le Touquet, France. He left Le Touquet on the morning of Oct. 3 and landed at Tolous Lo Noble near Paris. He took off again the next morning on his ill-fated flight, but the moulding records in the plane did not show his destination.—AP.

Fantastic new weapon

However, some of the radioactive neutrons generated by nuclear fission inside the device would be channelled through an open-end lead tube and shot into the open as though from a gun.

The scientists, who declined to be identified, said that based on what they know of present-day reactor technology, development of a reactor small enough for mobility, yet "hot" enough to produce neutrons in practical quantities would present great problems. But they added the idea is "conceptually possible."—AP & AP.

Welensky criticises Macmillan

London, Nov. 3.
A Commonwealth premier tonight publicly criticised Prime Minister Macmillan in a bitter dispute over the constitutional future of the troubled central African federation.

Mr Macmillan told the House of Commons on Tuesday that none of the members of the Monckton Commission objected to discussing certain aspects of the controversial secession issue.

This would allow member states of the Federation to withdraw under certain conditions after a trial period.

In a public statement issued by his London office, Sir Roy Welensky said Mr Macmillan "regrettably was misinformed."

Sir Roy claimed some members of the commission had objected.

CHANGES

The row broke as Commonwealth relations secretary Mr Duncan Sandys told the House of Commons "quite extensive changes" might be needed if the federation is to survive.

This is exactly what the Monckton Commission—a 26-member body set up by Mr Macmillan—strongly urged last month after closely probing the future of the federation as a black-white partnership state.

Mr Sandys' statement was the first public indication by a British spokesman that Britain envisages big changes in the Federation's future constitution.—AP.

Chou's plea to Britain on Taiwan policy

London, Nov. 3.
China's Premier Chou En-lai urged Britain in effect tonight to break with American support of Chiang Kai-shek in order to improve relations and promote world peace.

He made his comments in a rare interview televised by the BBC and screened tonight in the United Kingdom.

He told his interviewer, British journalist Felix Green, that Britain's position toward China is an incomplete one.

His message, he said, was that it was not enough for London to recognise Peking.... It ought also no longer "trail" the United States in support of the Chiang Kai-shek regime on Formosa.

Mr Chou said that the Chinese people do not want war with the United States.

But he added "so long as the United States continues to occupy Taiwan there can be no basic improvement in relations between China and the U.S."

'GROUNDLESS SLANDER'

Mr Chou En-lai gave the interview in Peking on September 5 in a prepared reply to questions. The interview was televised tonight.

The Chinese premier ruled out any compromise over Formosa.

There was only one way to settle the conflict he said: "the United States government must agree to withdraw all its armed forces from Taiwan and the Taiwan straits."

Mr Chou termed as "groundless slander" reports that China rejects peaceful co-existence between nations of different racial systems.

"China has always stood for peaceful co-existence among nations with different systems," he stated.

"There is no divergence on this with Russia," he added.

RUSSIA AHEAD

In the interview Chou also made these other points:

★ He accused the United States of persisting in "policies of strength and cold war."

★ He said the Soviet Union was far ahead of the U.S. in science and technology.

★ Claimed the unbreakable solidarity among all the countries of the Socialist camp.

★ Described as regrettable India's alleged desire to hold on to a big piece of territory which belongs to China and claimed India was making new demands. But there remained hope for "positive results."

★ Sino-British relations have not improved as they should have because Britain "trails behind the U.S." in supporting the Chiang Kai-shek regime in the United Nations.

★ China was willing to work for normalisation of Sino-Japanese relations, in accordance with the five principles of peaceful co-existence, providing the new Japanese government "no longer pursues a policy of hostility to China" and provided Japan does not "trail behind the U.S. in manufacturing two Chinas."

★ Peking resolutely supports the Asian, African and Latin American peoples in their struggle against imperialists and colonialists.—UPI.

Abortion trial

Man told

about an alleged abortion which caused a woman to die, was told by the defence counsel today that his evidence conflicted with what he said statements in the trial of Tse

the Criminal Sessions with procuring miscarriages for two women, To Kuen-ha and Chau
Yuen-shan on June 22 and June 18 respectively.Liu Shui-yung, a 31-year-old businessman, married with two children, said he had been intimate with the dead woman,
To, and had taken her to see the accused in a reply to a newspaper advertisement.NONE WORKED
He said that they had visited the Nathan-road premises
several times and that the accused had sold them pills and medicines to end this pregnancy. None of these had worked.Mr. Patrick Yu, defending, pointed out during his cross-examination that Liu had made statements on the previous day which conflicted with other statements made today.One of these involved some medicine which according to earlier evidence said was "for pushing out the child."Liu admitted today that these words had not been used.
Asked why his evidence should be conflicting, Liu replied "my mind was confused."Mr. W. S. W. Davidson, for the Crown, earlier alleged that To died from tetanus after the accused had operated on her.

RECOVERED

The other woman in the case became ill with tetanus after a similar operation. She recovered.
When police raided the
Nathan-road premises, said Mr
Davidson, they found instruments used for abortion practices. There was no trace of any proper sterilising apparatus.
Bacteria found on the instruments was the same as the bacteria which caused the death of To.

struck the driver twice on the head. The man behind put his arms around the driver's neck.However, in the ensuing struggle the driver managed to take the "ignition key" and get out of the car.The driver's shirt was torn by Miller in the course of this struggle.Miller then smashed the glass of the taxi-meter.
Meanwhile, Insp Yip concluded, a European Inspector

The other man escaped.Miller said he was drunk and

News of a forgotten state law against election bets has thrown Nevada bookwagers on the US presidential race.The biggest question: What is any type of bet on an bookies closed their odds be-

Attorney General Roger

lem for local authorities.
Gaming Control Board Chairman Ray Abbaticchio agreed.

What to do?

Bookies disagreed on what to do with the bets they hold.
"We're going to pay the winners and collect from the losers," one said, "that's the only way to do it.""I don't see how we could go ahead," said another, "if a man lost his money and discovered the bet was illegal he'd try to get it back."No one seemed to know how much money was involved.

Liberal Party leader makes blunt attack on the PM

What (apart from enjoying playing Prime Minister) has Macmillan really done?

by JO GRIMOND

LIBERAL M.P. FOR ORKNEY AND SHETLAND

THE British vice is complacency. Mr Macmillan has played on it to the last sonorous phrase and the last fatherly evasion.

Having found how easy it was to say one thing and do another—or do nothing—he has left no stop unpulled.

With the help of Colman, Prentiss, and Vasey he has been projecting as the front of washing machines at home and the wise, world-weary statesman abroad.

Frivolous

Mr Macmillan is an actor. He enjoys the spectacle of himself playing Prime Minister.

Mr Macmillan is the best Tory Party manager since Baldwin, and let no one despise a talent for party management. Unless you are Winston and have a world war in the bargain, you won't get far in politics without it.

But Mr Macmillan, with all his political talents, will get the thumbs-down from history for his frivolous refusal to face any difficulty. He saw Eden fall because he grasped a nettle, and he has been astute enough to give no repeat performance.

He found that it wasn't only rowers who look one way and go another. He can make rings round the Opposition in Parliament and his mastery of the Tory Party is complete.

But what of Britain under his Prime Ministership? Let us look at the record—

The first duty of a Government is to provide defence for its citizens.

Have we got a defence policy which makes sense? No. The British Nuclear Deterrent deters no one. Blue Streak is the waste-paper basket. Our "conventional forces" are totally inadequate. And all at a phenomenal cost.

Of course you should never trust the Tories with defence.

Resisted

Curiously enough the greatest Defence Ministers of modern times have both been Liberals—Cairdwell and Haldane—and both bitterly attacked by the Tories. Still the record of our Government has reached a new low—even for Tories.

Then let's look at Africa.

There was the wind of change speech. South Africa has reaped the whirlwind.

Mr Lennox-Boyd (so earnestly projected as the greatest Colonial Secretary of all time) has been blown away with all his policies.

Lord Home will, no doubt, forget his forthright pronouncement as late as February this year—that "Her Majesty's Government" take this opportunity of reaffirming that they are opposed to any proposal for the secession of any one of those territories from the Federation.

I give the Government credit for considerable pilancy over Africa—but of leadership there has been none.

Let us look at Foreign Affairs—Mr Macmillan's chosen field.

For years he resisted the suggestion of a Summit. Then he suddenly saw its virtues (whatever they are). He threw out the idea of disengagement between East and West Germany—then hastily withdrew it. He has thrown out many ideas—and never followed them up.

Failure

What did he hope to achieve at the Summit?

The brutal fact is that the Summit is the one place where Britain doesn't count.

The Summit, if it means anything (which I doubt), means America, Russia and perhaps China and later on perhaps a United Europe as a fourth Power.

Was it just because Britain would be called on to make no decisions there that Mr Macmillan has favoured it?

For there is a vast discrepancy between the Government's phrases and its policies. It is all in favour of "interdependence"—so long as you don't have to do anything about it. It is all in favour of Europe—in the abstract.

Europe is the greatest failure of Mr Macmillan's diplomacy.

The great movement which is creating one of the largest and most dynamic markets in the world is forging ahead—without Britain. We sit dithering on the brink while the leadership which should be ours passes to Western Germany.

There might have been an alternative. We might have tried to create an even more imaginative grouping based on the Commonwealth and the Western Alliance. But we have not.

Let us look at home. "We've never had it so good."

Perhaps—though I didn't see much affluence in the homes of pensioners or among the workers of many a slum-ridden city—or indeed among Highland crofters.

But how good is so good? Every day we read of fresh strikes. After 10 years in office the Tory Government scores 0 on industrial relations.

A property-owning democracy? Again talk, talk, and every Budget goes by without action.

We have the most sluggish economy of any major nation. Our children will look back in amazement at this, the most skillful people on earth, the nursery of modern inventors, continually toppling from inflation to stagnation.

No sooner does production begin to increase than Mr Macmillan's Government has to stop it. No amount of exhortation laced with syrup can cover up the fundamental lack of imagination or courage over the running of our economy.

Look at our taxation system. Talk about killing the goose which lay the golden egg! We tax to the bone anyone who earns a decent wage but let the gamblers go scot free.

And this is not done in the name of Socialist equality but by a Tory Government which talks of the Opportunity State.

Riddled

Many industries are riddled with restrictive practices, and our nationalised industries practise the peculiar wisdom of raising the price when they can't sell their products.

But why should Mr Macmillan worry? Was not Mr Gaiskill a leading advocate of British H-bombs until his party began rumbling behind him? Are not the Socialist Front Bench even more insular—more opposed to the European Common Market—than the Govern-

The cruel pace of nursing a musical to success

New York. THERE'S no business like show business for putting you in hospital. Look what has happened to "Camelot," the 600,000-dollar ($214,000) musical starring Julie Andrews which Broadway folk are saying will be the greatest thing since "My Fair Lady."

At the moment it is playing in Toronto, Canada. The great team that made "My Fair Lady" has created this glittering musical about King Arthur and his Round Table. Alan Jay Lerner wrote the book and lyrics. Frederick Loewe wrote the music. Moss Hart, king of playwright-directors on Broadway, directed the show.

But what happened to this trip of Broadway nights? Illness has knocked out two of them. Alan Lerner, the wiry, 42-year-old writer, went down last month with ulcers. The cause: overwork. The remedy: eight days in hospital.

Relentless

Instead of the smell of greasepaint, Lerner sniffed that subtly pervasive hospital smell—disinfectant and flowers. He sat up in bed between stiff sheets, ate slops, and furiously worked over the book of the show.

The second-half needs to be gay, lighter... Don't we need more jokes here? Can we zip up the jousting scene? And that love scene between Lancelot and Guinevere (Julie Andrews)... isn't there something missing there?

Such were the problems that occupied Alan Lerner—the urgent, relentless pressures of readying a big musical for Broadway.

Of course, the whole thing would be gone into with Loewe and Hart as soon as he got out of hospital.

On the day Lerner came out, Moss Hart, aged 55, collapsed in his hotel room with a heart attack.

Then Hugh Walker, managing director of the O'Keefe Centre, the theatre where "Camelot" is playing, went down also with ulcers. He is in hospital awaiting an operation.

I was in Toronto for the opening night of "Camelot" six weeks ago. No prelude of disaster dimmed that glittering occasion. Toronto fetched all its top-hats out. The ladies wore gowns from New York and Paris.

Toronto had never seen a first night like it! The Lieutenant-Governor and the Regimental Guard of the Queen's Own Rifles turned out.

"Are you ready for the photographers now, Mr Burton?" This was backstage, after the show, and the call-boy put his head round the door as I talked to Richard Burton. "It is my first musical," said Burton. He plays King Arthur. He smiled for the photographers and put his arm around Julie Andrews. "I can tell you this, I have never had so much fun."

Moss Hart, six weeks from a heart attack, said to me: "Could you bear all of that four hours? We have to do plenty of cutting on this show." He looked great, Sun-tanned. Smiling.

The poor boy from the Bronx—his first job was checking fur pelts in a warehouse—linked arms with his actress wife Kitty Carlisle and they went off for drinks at the Royal York Hotel.

Perfection

"You Can't Take It With You" is one of Moss Hart's most famous plays. But in show business what you take with you everywhere is anxiety: the anxiety of striving to achieve perfection before that fatal moment when the curtain goes up on Broadway and 600,000 dollars' worth of talent, scenery, and costume is exposed to the fickle gaze of 1,500 people and a couple of dozen critics.

Moss Hart has been in the business for 40 years. Anxiety doesn't show on him as it does on Julie Andrews, who told me: "I know this is a hit. I have exactly the same feeling about it—a something that tells me this is terrific—I did about 'My Fair Lady'."

And all the time she spoke her fingers twisted nervously and her lips trembled a little.

Do you envy actors, playwrights, directors? The spotlight of fame, the electric excitement of success—these are things they experience in greater measure than any other people in any other business.

But heavens, they work hard for it. Hard. Hard. Hard. Lerner had a heart attack. Hard work has struck down Moss Hart with his second heart attack in seven years. And the third man at "Camelot's" round table, composer Frederick Loewe, suffered a heart attack only two years ago.

At the Wellfleet Hospital in Toronto, Hart has been ordered total rest for one month by the doctors.

Ordnance

Alan Lerner has taken over the direction of "Camelot." Let Lerner tag and Loewe fret. Let Moss Hart lie between cool sheets. The curtain will go up on "Camelot," December 3. It is ordained, as King Arthur was ordained 1,500 years ago to wrest the sword Excalibur from the living rock.

I'd rather be third any time than second

Says NANCY SPAIN

DON'T look now, but there's another Oscar Wilde on the way. Into the West End at the end of the month for a three-week season comes Irish actor Michael Mac Liammoir eager to be the Oscar most likely to succeed.

Into an evening entitled The Importance of Being Oscar he pucks (or so I gather) just about everything anyone can do to Ireland's most fashionable writer of the year.

Dreams

Some may groan at this news. I am NOT among them. I like things to go in threes. In my opinion it is the second fellow who is the worse.

Take Lawrence and the Arabs. It is the uncast man who is going to try to copy Sir Alec Guinness who is going to be the wet one. In my opinion Peter Finch's film of Wilde was better than Robert Morley's.

The theatre is a little tiny world all on its own. So is fashion. Every winter the great designers disappear into their studios and get ready to pop out in January with the New Line.

A charming lad Marty, no doubt, but, because he was second, to me profoundly depressing.

Humour on gramophone records too. It's an industry that's booming.

Paddy Roberts, Tony Hancock, Peter Sellers, I haven't a clue who came first of that little lot, but obviously some splendid tycoon of the turntables said: "Eh, humour's going big. Get someone funny and let him cut a disc," and clambered obediently on to the band wagon.

Brigitte Bardot, as well. There's an industry of custom-built models that ran clean off the old French rails. The first Brigitte, with her hair hanging down and all, she was spilling. The second, Anette Stroyberg, who was also the SECOND Mrs. Yvelin, well, she was about as inspiring as a side of cold young veal in a butcher's shop. Mylene Demongot may well redeem the Brigitte look yet.

But in some worlds there are genuine coincidences. Noel Coward and Nancy Mitford don't work in collaboration. But in the same week they each have a novel published.

One is about a state visit. The other is about a state visit. And Coward is even dedicated to Mitford. (I can't wait for Audron Waugh's father to come out with one too...)

I wouldn't like to say which came first or second of these.

But of one thing I am determined in my own mind. If I can't come first I'd rather be third. After all, it was when they introduced second class to British Railways that everything went wrong.

BRITISH SCIENTISTS TAKE THE SMELL OUT OF HOUSE GAS

Secret is found after 100 years

BRITISH scientists have discovered a cheaper, more efficient way of taking the smell out of household gas. It is a secret which all nations have been hunting for more than 100 years. And it cuts the cost of purifying gas from 3 pence per therm to as little as 1 of a penny, and is being hailed as a real breakthrough in the streamlining of Britain's gas industry.

At present, all gas from a works has to be passed through trays of powdered iron oxide.

The oxide removes hydrogen sulphide—the favourite basic ingredient of many a school-boy's "stink bomb." The process is dirty, and cumbersome.

In the new method, gas is bubbled through water containing a special dye. The system is completely enclosed and fully automatic.

Big step

Will it cut the cost of gas to the household? Probably not. Capital costs of the new equipment will soak up the saving at first.

But later it may help the industry to pay back rising costs.

Certainly it is a big step forward towards more efficient gas works, and also has wide commercial applications.

The discovery was made by a team led by Dr. Tom Nicliden, chief scientist in the North-West Gas Board, in co-operation with Dr. E. Brunner, research manager of a big British dye firm.

The new process is now being installed in a large gasworks in Manchester, and will shortly go into use in Liverpool. Later it will certainly come South.

will not mean smell-free gas in the home. That would be highly dangerous. There are still enough organic compounds left in the gas to ensure that it has a distinct odour.

Lose that 'fuzz'

Do you find most of your snap-shots are "fuzzy"? It need no longer happen. A most accurate rangefinder for cameras has just been designed. The inventor is 39-year-old Mr. Norman Barton, who has mally designs rangefinders for tanks at the Fighting Vehicles Research and Development Establishment, Chertsey. This time he has a winner for civilians.

You look through a little window with both eyes, and see three indicating marks at different distances. The centre mark—a spot—is the focusing point and indicates the range of your "target."

Two illuminated rings, one in front of the spot, the other behind, show exactly how much of the foreground and background will also be in focus, or "sharp," when you press the camera button. You get a true stereoscopic effect.

The rangefinder can be fitted to any camera, small or large.

'Model' H-blast

Yet another advance—this time in the field of atomic weapons. Scientists at Aldermaston no longer need to explode an H-bomb to know what the heat and blast effect will be on its target.

They have found out how to produce exactly the same effects with a small pinch of conventional explosive. They try it on models of their targets they wish to destroy.

How can they be so sure the small-scale tests give an accurate picture of the "bigger effects"? The Christmas Island series, just before all nations agreed to halt H-tests, confirmed exactly their model predictions. So now, the only reason to test a bomb is to see if the mechanism works.

WOMANSENSE

The gimmick is here to stay

by JANE ROGERS

Well, I was wrong and I admit it. When the divided skirt hit the fashion scene I laughed it off as a gimmick. I still think it is a gimmick—but it is here to stay.

IN PARIS they included a few "culottes" in the couture collections. Madeleine de Fontenay and Jacques Heim both featured them. But this was one fashion that the French copied from someone else, for it all started in America.

IN NEW YORK, where the craze for culottes began, they are now wearing these wide, divided skirts with city suits, country-style tweeds, even as long evening skirts. You'll find a culotte skirt in America teamed with a straight tailored jacket in broadcloth topped as "The smartest suit of the season," Trina Norell, one of America's top designers, has completely succumbed to the idea, and given all the suits in his collection a divided skirt.

IN LONDON there's a culotte skirt or two in all the brightest, youngest spring collections. The night-wear manufacturers have picked up the idea too, and are making "sleep suits" with divided skirts.

Of course properly cut culottes don't look like wide-legged pants when you are standing still, or just twirling along, they look like a flared skirt with an inverted pleat back and front.

What's their special attraction? None that I can see. The girls who have gone overboard for culottes tell me they give you the freedom that you get from a pair of jeans, but elegance as well. To me culottes seem rather an encumbrance, like a giant pair of plus-fours flapping round your shins, and in my opinion even getting out of a car they look far less elegant than the tightest peg-top skirt.

But for beachwear and sportswear they can't fail to catch on. Culottes are more chic and feminine-looking than Bermuda shorts, and are kinder to most figures, especially the larger ones. If you want to walk straight off the beach, and around town in them, nobody will stare. But for suits—culottes are strictly for the teenager.

Beehive

The beehive hairstyle which rose in its last stages almost to the heights of a Madame Pompadour coiffure, has now been discarded by London's teenage girls and replaced by a smooth shingle that is practically inequipped to the head.

If you haven't got the necessary question-mark curls curving over your cheekbones, several hairdressers sell fake ones to clip under your own hair, or push under a cloche hat.

The young have gone crazy, of course, for the "Dior look" the beehive hat that might have been knitted from rug wool, and the rolled-over polo collar are selling like hot cakes in the teenage department of one fashion store. Co-ordinated suits is another idea that is being taken up with enthusiasm—you buy a striped jacket, then a matching straight skirt and you have a suit for work. Add a pair of matching striped pedal-pushers and it turns into a slacks-suit for weekends.

Extra

Fake leather fabrics go undercover now. They are making them into Beatnik dresses—a straight up and down sack in black, for instance, tied with a rather clumsy fake leather belt. The boys are buying mock leather waistcoats decorated, cowboy fashion, with white fringing.

Shaped cuban heels are not, as you might imagine, being taken up by the girls to replace that lethal silletto heel. Instead it's the boys who are wearing cuban-heeled shoes, like those of the Spanish dancers. The extra inch gives them more height, but they are keeping the winkle-picker toe.

This week's teen idea comes from Digby Morton, the one-time couturier who now turns out sportswear for young shoppers. He has found a novel solution to the problem of the shirt blouse that tends to ride up and come out of your skirt.

With his separates Mr. Morton offers a frilled ruffian of the shirt fabric, fastened onto a leather belt. The result? It looks as though you are wearing your shirt outside your skirt, neatly belted, and it hides the tail of the real shirt beneath.

A GAY, thick-knit sweater by Hinckley Knitting Co. with a roll collar, teamed with slim pants by Smith.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

Small Games Are Fun

—Knarf And Hanid Take A Short Cut To Play—

By MAX TRELL

LATE at night, after everyone was asleep, Knarf and Hanid, the Shadow Children with the Turned-Around Names, made themselves small.

How small? About as small as a match stick, sometimes about as small as a pin—and sometimes even as small as a tack.

If Knarf and Hanid had made themselves any smaller than a tack, they might have disappeared completely.

Size of match stick

Now on this particular evening, Knarf and Hanid made themselves as small as match sticks. It was extraordinary in different: everything looked different. When they were their ordinary size, the carpet on the floor looked like a carpet.

To dining room

Knarf and Hanid decided to go into the dining room.

"Oh dear, how can we get out of this room?" Hanid asked her brother.

Knarf laughed. It was easy. There was a space under the door as big as the space under a loose fence. Knarf wriggled under it and Hanid followed right after him.

Spang over ditches

They had to spang over a dozen of these ditches before they reached the dining room. In the centre of the dining room stood the big table where the whole family had their meals.

"If we could only get to the top of the table," said Hanid, "what fun we could have!"

It wasn't easy for Knarf and Hanid to climb up to the top of the table.

First they tried to climb up the leg. But the leg was too slippery. They came sliding down again. Then they tried to grab hold of one end of the tablecloth that hung down fairly close to the floor. But this scheme was no good, either.

No matter how high they jumped, they couldn't jump high enough to reach the dangling end of the tablecloth.

Can't break rule

Finally the Cat came into the room.

"We'd like to get up to the top of the table, Mrs Cat dear," said Hanid. "We want to take a walk."

"It's a rule in this house," said the Cat. In a stern voice she smoothed her whiskers, "that no one is to walk on the table. Somebody told me that just this morning."

Hanid felt ashamed. She suddenly remembered that she was the one who had told the Cat the rule about not walking on the table.

"However," said the Cat, "if you think that rule about walking on the table can be changed a little, I'll be glad to take you and Knarf to the top of the table."

The Shadows slid under spoons and jumped over salt shakers.

Knarf quickly agreed that he was willing to change the rule right away.

"You can walk on top of the table all you want," he said to the Cat.

But Hanid shook her head and thanked the Cat and said that she had changed her mind about walking on top of the table.

"It's wrong for you and it's wrong for us," she said. "Oh, all right," said the Cat. "But I'll help you out just the same."

Walked out

So the Cat reached up with her paw and caught hold of the tablecloth and pulled it down with everything on it.

"Now," she said, "you can walk on the tablecloth on the table, which is even better than walking on the tablecloth on the table. Because you can fall off the table but you can never fall off the floor."

Then the Cat walked out of the room, feeling very pleased with herself.

Knarf and Hanid had a great deal of fun, even though Hanid thought it a bit wrong, walking on one end of the tablecloth to the other. I was like walking across a beautiful white field with all sorts of odd-looking things in the way that had to be jumped-over or dodged-around.

They had to jump over the salt and pepper shakers. They had to dodge around the sugar bowl. They had to slide under the spoons and jump over the knives and forks.

The most fun

But the most fun was crawling under the napkin and dashing round and round the small wicker bread basket.

"And, of course," said the Cat to Knarf and Hanid, "you must remember when she met them, 'I got blamed for everything. But I don't care. Cats always get blamed for everything.'"

And—would you believe it!—she would have pulled the tablecloth down again at that very moment if Hanid hadn't promptly stopped her.

JACOBY on BRIDGE

TODAY'S hand is rather similar to yesterday's in that the key play is a finesse in the suit in which the defenders hold the ace-king and several others. It is different from yesterday's obligatory finesse in that there is a real finessing situation.

overtricks and if you can make one you want it.

South might fool around and return a club to see if he can coax a spade lead from his opponents, but even in duplicate you don't fool around with rare games so South draws trumps with three leads and then cashes one of his diamonds if he feels like it. In any event he gets ready to play a spade from his own hand toward dummy's king. If West held the ace he just might play it, but West has no ace and no problem and East's ace takes the king. It does not matter what East plays now. Eventually South will go over to dummy's king of diamonds; lead a spade and finesse the ten spot against the jack. The finesse works and South has his overtrick.

FOR AN IDEA

By HELEN BURKE

THIS week's recipes are to help people living near each other, who invite each other, turn and turn about, to lunch.

They can try out dishes which they may not have previously made. This first meal is a "quickie."

ESCALOPES DE VEAU MAISON.

The ingredients here are two very well beaten out small escalopes of veal, two very thin slices of boiled ham of approximately the same size, 3oz. mushrooms, two thin slices of Fontina or Gruyere cheese, or a small packet of Philadelphia cream cheese, or two small triangles of petite Gruyere, a little parsley, Madeira, or Marsala, together with a tomato garnish, and, if you want them, canned asparagus tips.

First, place the sliced mushrooms in a small pan with a little nut of butter, a tablespoon of boiling water, a squeeze of lemon juice and pepper and salt to taste. Cover lightly and cook for two minutes.

Halve two tomatoes, brush them with butter and grill them.

Hot grill

Melt a walnut of butter in a frying-pan and, to prevent it burning, add a dessertspoon of olive oil. Quickly cook the seasoned escalopes in them.

Transfer to a shallow fireproof oven-dish and place a slice of ham on each.

Divide the drained mushrooms between them and top all with a slice or portion of the cheese. Garnish with the tomatoes. Slip under a very hot grill.

Meanwhile, add a tablespoon of sherry, Madeira or Marsala to the frying pan, with three to four tablespoons of stock (but water and a chicken cube will do). Add too, the juice from the mushrooms. Boil up, stirring them around the pan to release the residue.

A garnish

By this time, the cheese toppling will have bubbled and become flecked with brown and the escalopes will be ready to be served. Pour the gravy around, not over, the contents of the dish and at once take to the table.

Cooked spinach can replace the mushrooms on the ham. In this case the mushrooms can be used with the tomatoes as a garnish.

For "fettoria," a baked Breton Beedling each. Or fresh fruit.

Rupert and the Sky-boat—37

Now that he is fairly safe again Rupert wonders what he ought to do. "This sky-boat is a marvelous thing," he says. "If we both step out of it together it will be so light that it will shoot up into the sky and may never be seen again. We must try to fasten it and save it for that queer inventor man." "How?" asks Margot. "There's a wood over there as high as we are," says Rupert. "Let's fly there and see if the trees can help us." And they are soon floating between the large, twisted trunks of the ancient trees in a patch of the old forest.

Patterson - Johansson fight date practically settled

New York, Nov. 3. Floyd Patterson said today a third world heavyweight title fight involving himself and Ingemar Johansson of Sweden "is 90 per cent set and likely will be held between the first of January and the last day of March next year."

Patterson made the statement to newsmen after having received a second belt as heavyweight champion from Nat Fleischer, editor of Ring Magazine. Patterson is the only man ever to have regained the heavyweight title.

"If it is out-of-doors it will be Los Angeles or Miami. If indoors, it will be in New York," the champion said.

'Much progress'
Humbert (Jack) Pugacz, managing director of Feature Sports, Inc., said so much progress had been made toward a third meeting between the two that he should be able to name the date and site a week from today. FSJ promoted the second meeting of the two fighters.

In their first meeting, Johansson knocked out Patterson. In the second, Patterson knocked out Johansson. Both fights were in New York.—AP.

BRITISH SOCCER FROM THE TOP! Man-to-man talk in confidence

ENGLAND'S BOSS HAS HIS SMILE

By JOE MERCER

(Aston Villa manager... in an interview)

Wednesday at Wembley did my heart good. I have said all along that the best English players, playing naturally in conditions they know, are the best in the world.

So I was delighted for the players, but most of all for Walter Winterbottom, the England team manager. This must have been an hour of triumph for him.

Winterbottom in the past has lived through a great deal of controversy and while 'hot criticism' almost any other man would have collapsed under it, he has not been free to reply to it.

The greatest compliment I can pay him is that he has never become embittered. He has always been keen to go on working, always retained his faith in his methods and beliefs.

No one showed more animosity to Walter Winterbottom and his methods than I did when I first began, years ago, to think of management and the control of football teams.

ADMIRATION

But over the years, in conversations with him, in working with him at coaching courses, I have come to have tremendous admiration for him.

I CANNOT THINK OF A MORE CAPABLE MAN AS ENGLAND TEAM MANAGER, AND I AM CONVINCED THAT THE JOB DEMANDS HIS TYPE OF MAN.

And now is the time for Walter Winterbottom to take on more authority.

He should select his side and put it to his committee with confidence and say, "This is what I am doing, this is the team which will do the job for us."

Most of the animosity in football towards Winterbottom has been the animosity of ignorance. He has never been able to state his case publicly or proclaim his coaching methods. The only way he can spread his gospel has been at coaching courses or in talking to managers.

That is why I become angry when people like Danny Blanchflower and Stanley Matthews trot out criticisms of coaching—WITHOUT HAVING EXPERIENCED THEMSELVES.

HIGHER AND HIGHER

When giant John Thomas cleared 7 ft 3¼ ins in the United States a few months ago, it seemed that he must remain world high jump champion for many years to come. But no records are safe in these days of super-athletes.

Since then the so-called "wonder man" of American athletics has been out-jumped by two Russians in the Olympics, and now his amazing world record is seriously threatened.

The man who may become the first to clear 7 ft 4 ins is Valery Brumel, the Olympic silver medalist, who equalled Shvakadze's gold medal performance of 7 ft 1 inch in Rome.

Brumel's latest jump of 7 ft 1.87 ins is a European record. On his third jump in Moscow he attempted the world record, height and cleared the bar only to dislodge it with his hand.

Like Bannister with his sub-four-minute mile, Thomas has merely opened the eyes of athletes to the possibilities in this event. Under such pressure, Brumel, a 19-year-old student, has this season improved on his personal best by more than four inches. — London Express Service.

PI students lose in Japan

Tokyo, Nov. 3. The visiting Philippines College Students Football team lost today 69-61 to Keio University in Tokyo.

This was the fourth game of their tour here.

Keio beat the Philippines 66-61 at Yokohama.

The visitors will meet Meiji University on Saturday, in Tokyo. — Reuter.

What Winterbottom and the F.A. coaching schemes are trying to do.

This is not to say that because we had one solid win over Spain that Winterbottom is suddenly a genius and that everything is right in football. We have still much to think about.

ENTERPRISE

OUR DEFENSIVE METHODS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD. BUT WE CAN BE MORE ENTERPRISING IN ATTACK.

We might decide that we can afford to use Jimmy Greaves and Bobby Charlton as attacking players only and relieve them of heavy defensive work.

Winterbottom needs more power. He needs all the help the entire game can give him. Now is the time for more hard thinking about this.

WE MUST realise that we have not been quite so bad as some past results suggest.

WE MUST make use of everything we can learn from foreign football.

WE MUST begin to believe in ourselves.

WE MUST learn that if we play positive, attacking, penetrative football as England did on Wednesday, then the great world prizes can be ours. — London Express Service.

LEAGUE HOCKEY TAKES A REST FOR NOVEMBER

First Interport trial on Sunday

By NUMPERE

There will be no hockey league matches this weekend as the league has now reached its halfway mark and takes a rest for the month of November.

Instead, interest this weekend will be centred on the first Interport trial scheduled to take place at King's Park on Sunday at 2.30 pm.

It will probably have opposition in the form of the Macao Grand Prix but the following players have been invited to take part.

Oliphant (Army), Holmes (Army), Potliff (Army), Frusher (Army), Fearn (Army), Bowell (Army), R. A. Silva (Recrolo), Alonso (Recrolo), L. Guzman (Recrolo), Colino (Recrolo), Federico (Recrolo), Valoma (Macensis), Sa'silva (Macensis), Gardner (Nav Bharat), U. S. Dillon (Nav Bharat), Kadir (Prisons), Zia Hussain (Prisons), Ryan (RAF), Coffey (KCC), Tait (KCC), Macaulay (HKHC), O. K. Dallah (IRC), Karamdin (IRC), Kachell (IRC), Rahman (IRC), and Yusuf (IRC).

The Army vs Royal Navy match originally scheduled for Saturday November 5 will now be played on Tuesday November 8 at Bookhampton, bully-off at 4 pm.

League review

A review of the League standings shows Nav Bharat 'A' at the top of the first division table by virtue of their better goal average than KCC although both sides have 10 points from seven games.

However, Macensis 'A', lying third with nine points from six games, and Army 'A', fourth with seven points from five games, could both overhaul the leaders.

At the other end, Recrolo 'B' with only two points and pointless Macensis 'B' look all set for relegation after one season in the senior division. This serves to emphasise the big gap in the standards of hockey between the divisions.

In Section 'A' of the second division, Prisons have maximum points from seven games, their nearest rivals being Army 'B' who have only dropped two points in six games. Rangers are in third place with nine points from seven games.

In Section 'B' a two-horse race is developing for the championship. Both the RAF and Army 'C' have won all of their five matches played but the RAF have a far superior goal average. These two sides have not yet met but do so when league hockey restarts on December 4.

Third in this section are HKHC 'A' with seven points from six matches.

NEW TEACHERS COLLEGE

Government plan to build in Pokfulam

Construction of a new training college for teachers, with accommodation for more than 400 students, will start in January next year.

27 FLEE IN STOLEN MOTORBOAT

$100 fine for having dagger

A 31-year-old company manager was fined $100 by Mr. J. T. Morris at Central Court this morning for possessing a dagger without a licence. Ko Kam-po, of Flat 11, B Block, third floor, Model Housing Estate, Kowloon, pleaded not guilty to a charge of possession of arms through Mr. W. I. Cheung of P. H. Sin and Co. Ko said in court that he bought the dagger some time in 1955, but had lost it since. Asked why he bought the dagger, Ko said: "I like its craftsmanship and beauty." The dagger was found in the kitchen of defendant's house by Sub-Inspector J. W. Royer during a search on October 28. Mr. Morris ordered the dagger to be confiscated. Sub-Inspector H. V. Brown prosecuted.

Situated in Pokfulam, the new Northcote Training College, as it will be known, is expected to be completed by March, 1962 and will replace the old and now inadequate pre-war college building in Benham-road. The new College will help provide the larger number of trained teachers who are now required under the Government's school expansion programme. Both one-year and two-year courses for teachers in training will be available. The new College will consist of three buildings—a main teaching block, a hostel block and quarters for some of the teaching staff.

Main block
The main block will contain some 20 large rooms for special purposes, such as woodwork and handicraft, as well as 16 smaller tutorial rooms. In addition, there will be a spacious hall for general purposes, a library and a fully-equipped gymnasium as well as other facilities. The site at Pokfulam is about 160,000 square feet in area and consists of a series of terraces and slopes. Site formation work and construction of the retaining walls have been completed and tenders for the construction of the College buildings are called for in today's Government Gazette.

CULVERT TO BE REBUILT

The existing stormwater culvert, which runs from Chatham-road to the Hingmoo reclamation underneath the Army camp and the K.C.R. railway track, has deteriorated to such an extent that a complete reconstruction of its entire length is necessary. The existing culvert was built long before the war and it will be replaced by a reinforced concrete box culvert of about 610 feet long.

An artist's impression of the new building issued by Government this morning.

Collapses on hearing sentence

A 40-year-old man, Tsang Chung, of no fixed address, collapsed in the dock at Central Court this morning when he was sent to jail for three years on drug charges. He was carried down to the cell unconscious by several policemen. The Magistrate, Mr. Derek Coss, sentenced Tsang to three years' jail on a charge of keeping a heroin den and two years each for possession of 6.8 grams of heroin and possession of instruments intended for the injection of dangerous drugs. The sentences, however, are to run concurrently. Tsang had nine previous convictions including six for drug offences. Tsang was arrested in an unnumbered hut on the roof of a house in Sai Yuen-lane on Wednesday when a party of police carried out a raid on information. The police seized 130 packets of heroin, an injection needle, a syringe, and $27.00 in cash.
